Money is at the heart of everything

Too many students graduate secondary school without fundamental knowledge of personal finance or economics. At News Decoder, we strive to help young people understand what is happening in the world. We see economics education as fundamental to that.

News Decoder provides a deep database of global news stories, webinars and podcasts that can be incorporated into an economics class curriculum. We work with more than 45 correspondents in countries all over the world – from India to Peru to Rwanda. We've tasked our correspondents with important economic questions:

Can economic policies help cool the Earth?

Can protecting the environment fuel economic growth?

Can a nation owe too much money?

Are currency exchange rates important?

Is youth employment important to the economy?

What you can do with News Decoder

- ★ Use our stories to break down complex events, ideas and policies so students can see the relevance of economics and how it affects people's lives.
- ★ Set up a class webinar on a financial topic. In News Decoder webinars, students choose a topic, conduct research, seek out experts and then present their findings live over the Internet.
- ★ Demonstrate economic ideas through the production of journalism. Through our Pitch, Report, Draft and Revise process, students identify problems around them. They research that topic, find an expert to interview about it and from that, create a compelling news story with the aim of publishing it on News Decoder. We guide them every step of the way.

One student reported how the Ukraine war had led to a spike in grain costs affecting boulangeries in France.

Another wrote about the global phenomenon of food deserts where markets cluster in affluent neighborhoods.

How we work with classes

We work with individual classes upon the request of faculty. We can Zoom in for customized workshops on topics such as sourcing, interviewing and writing. We will also work with students individually once they pitch stories to us. Let us help you engage your students and make your work easier. We can also provide guest speakers to talk to students about particular topics.
